Sand Secrets by Carina Seth Andersson

The table is a stage for culinary events. Saucers, bowls, cutlery, dishes, pans, vases, guests, candles: they all form part of a scenography that let the food shine in all its glory. And the stage, be it at home or in a restaurant, requires dramaturgy. Not everything revealed at the same moment, but secrets exposed one after another. Lift the lid to present flavor and fragrances retained within along with vitamins and healthy nutrients. Keep the food warm or cold, according to taste.

Carina Seth Andersson has once again managed to balance perfection and particularity in her new additions to Sand, her series of stoneware originally conceived for Nationalmuseum in Stockholm. The different objects are abstract yet familiar, alluding to age-old traditions refined to perfection. 'There is a moment of surprise when you lift the lid,' says Carina Seth Andersson. 'The secrets of the chef unveiled! Together these earthenware objects will create a whole little landscape on the table.' The trend to bring forward a multitude of different dishes for the table certainly does require the stage be set with a variety of vessels. Glazed on the inside, raw but softly polished on the exterior, the three black and clay-colored earthenware canisters are available in three different sizes.

Elegant in it's shape, the Sand Secrets Small Bowl can hide many treasures, both hot and cold. Or maybe something entirely different.

Sand Secrets – Carina Seth Andersson

Let the lid hide the secrets within. Salted butter? Pheasant broth? Pâté? Kimchi? Oysters? Peaches in olive oil? Pickled rhubarb? Hot or cold! A plentitude of surprises that can be revealed one after another. And with the same theatrical elegance as past times silver serving dishes and domes, now with a contemporary understated elegance. Carina Seth Andersson has also created a can for soy sauce, oil and other condiments, and a teapot, all to complete her earthenware collection. 'My idea is to hide away and expose, and why not, Sand Secret can hold small treasures and any kind of secrets, not only food.'
